challenges. The major functions of guidance and counselling include educative, reflective, and welfare functions. Each plays a vital role in shaping well-balanced individuals.

1. Educative Function

The educative function focuses on enhancing students' learning abilities and academic performance. Guidance helps students identify their strengths, weaknesses, interests, and learning styles.

- Example: A counsellor may guide a student struggling in mathematics by helping them discover effective study habits, time management skills, or tutoring options.

Through this, students learn how to learn effectively, develop confidence, and improve academic results.

Contribution to development:

- Personal: Builds self-discipline and motivation.
- Social: Encourages cooperation and participation in study groups.
- Academic: Enhances problem-solving and study skills.

2. Reflective Function

The reflective function helps students understand themselves better— their emotions, values, attitudes, and goals. Counselling encourages self-awareness and self-assessment so that students can make thoughtful decisions about their lives and futures.

- Example: A student unsure about future career choices may receive career counselling sessions that help reflect on personal interests and abilities, leading to a better career decision.

Contribution to development:

- Personal: Promotes emotional maturity and confidence.
- Social: Improves communication and empathy with peers.
- Academic: Reduces anxiety and distractions, allowing for better focus.

3. Welfare Function

The welfare function ensures the well-being of students by providing emotional, psychological, and social support. It involves helping students cope with personal problems, family issues, or social difficulties that might affect their performance.

- Example: If a student is experiencing bullying, the counsellor intervenes, provides emotional support, and works with teachers to create a safe environment.

Contribution to development:

- Personal: Builds emotional resilience and self-esteem.
- Social: Fosters a caring and inclusive school atmosphere.
- Academic: Minimizes stress and absenteeism, leading to better performance.

Overall Purpose of Guidance and Counselling in Schools

1. Personal Development: Helps students understand themselves, manage emotions, and develop positive self-concept.
2. Social Development: Encourages respect, teamwork, and conflict resolution skills among peers.
3. Academic Development: Assists in goal-setting, study planning, and overcoming learning barriers.

Conclusion

In summary, guidance and counselling perform educative, reflective, and welfare functions that together promote students' holistic development. When effectively implemented in schools, these services not only improve academic success but also prepare students to face life's challenges confidently and responsibly.
